Ginninderra

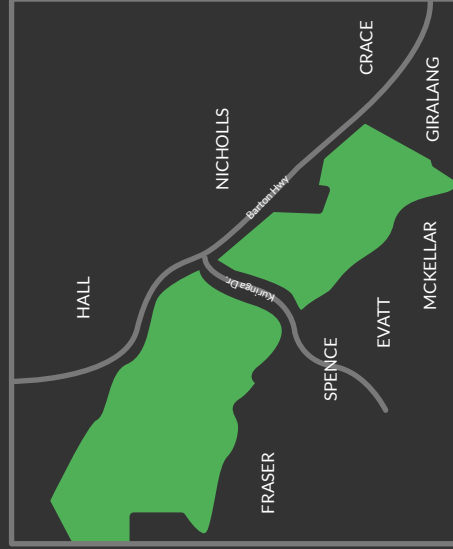

Background

The CSIRO Ginninderra Field Station has played a valuable role and contributed to Australian science through its agriculture and farming research. The site has been identified as underutilised, and the valuable work undertaken there since 1958 will continue at a new location.

The site area is adjacent to your suburb and sits within the Barton Highway, William Slim Drive, Owen Dixon Drive and Kuringa Drive.

We are now investigating future uses of this land. As a first step, CSIRO has requested the National Capital Authority to reclassify the site as 'Urban Area' in the National Capital Plan Draft Amendment due for consultation in September.

We want your feedback

As the site is located in your neighbourhood we feel it is important to gain your views on this process and possible future uses of the area.

While you are welcome to provide feedback via the website (listed on the reverse), we are also extending the opportunity for you to chat informally with us to ask questions and provide your views at a neighbourhood drop-in session.
